

CULTURAL VALUES

The following are “typical” cultural perspectives; likely most do not fall into one specific category since we are a multi-cultural society. This is, however, an attempt to show differences in ways of thinking, living, and in general, being for American Indians and Alaska Natives.

Time is relative. Clocks are not watched. One does things as they need to be done. Often the family gets up as the sun rises and retires soon after the sun sets. “Indian Time” means when everyone arrives. A community meeting can be set for 1:00 pm and people will come as near that time as they wish. So the meeting may begin an hour or two later, and this bothers no one.	Time 	Time is important. Time is of the utmost importance. When a person says he will be somewhere at 10:00 am, he must be there at 10:00. Otherwise, he is felt to be a person who “steals” another man’s time. More and more, non-Indians rush. It is felt among this culture to be good to use “time” to its fullest extent.
Generally live each day as it comes. Plans for tomorrow often are left until the future becomes the present.	Today ..... Tomorrow 	Constantly are looking to tomorrow. Such items as insurance, savings for college, plans for vacation, etc., suggest to what extent non-Indians hold this value.
To have much patience and to wait is considered to be a good quality.	Patience ..... Action 	The man who is admired is the one who is quick to act. He gets things done rapidly and moves on to the next thing. To sit idly and let one’s competitor pass him by acting more quickly is considered bad business.
Indian groups often shame an individual, but once this is over, no guilty feeling is held by the individual.	Shame ..... Guilt 	After an act is committed that a non-Indian feels to be wrong, he carries inside him the knowledge of having done something wrong. This terrible feeling may make one ill mentally and physically.
The respected member of many Indian cultures is the one who shares and gives all his wealth to others.	Giving ..... Saving 	An individual with the quality of “thrift” is felt to have acquired a value worth much.
Aunts are often considered to be mothers. Uncles are called “fathers” and cousins are brothers and sisters of the immediate family. Even clan members are considered relatives, so Indian cultures consider many more individuals to be relatives.	Extended Family ..... Family 	Biological family is of the utmost importance, and relationships are limited within this group.
Respect is for the elders. Experience is felt to bring knowledge. So the older one is, the more knowledgeable he is. No effort is made to conceal white hair or other signs of age.	Age ..... Youth 	Thousands of dollars are spent yearly for hair dyes, make-up, and other items that make older people look younger. Whole towns have sprung up in the U.S. which advertise youthful living and are designed for “senior citizens.”
Members of the tribe often are suspicious of individuals who collect many material possessions. Some tribes hold celebrations and give away most of their possessions to others as “love gifts.” The Sioux enjoy such a practice.	Few Material Things ..... Material Possessions 	One’s lifetime is often spent collecting material goods. Non-Indians are taught from an early age to value “possessions,” which are handed down to family members from generation to generation. “Ownership” often equates to “success.”
The earth is here to enjoy. If man accepts this world as it is and lives as he should with it, there will not be sickness or lack of food.	Lives in Balance with Nature ..... Controls Nature 	Constantly searches for new ways to control and master the elements around them. Artificial lakes are made, natural waters are controlled, and electricity is generated and controlled. Such accomplishments are looked upon with pride.
